

Kristina Boe Dissing is a senior researcher at the Chiropractic Knowledge Hub in Denmark. Her main area of research is headache, focusing on primary care and clinical research. Presently, she is the project leader on the Headache in Chiropractic practice (HIC) project, which was developed to increase the knowledge about headache management in chiropractic practice in Denmark. It is the first project in Denmark to systematically investigate the management and trajectories of patients with headaches who seek chiropractic care.

In addition to her research, she is also a chiropractor in private practice, with over 20 years' experience of treating patients with headaches. Her extensive clinical experience combined with her research efforts make her a key figure in headache research and treatment in Denmark. She is dedicated to improving treatment methods and patient pathways, contributing to a better understanding of how chiropractic care can help patients with headaches.
